Inspired by the language of ancient bas-reliefs, Arca reinterprets engraved surfaces through a contemporary ceramic collection. Incisions, solids, and voids interact to create a dynamic play of light and shadow, transforming each tile into a fragment of a larger architectural composition. Defined by its square format and modular design, Arca allows endless configurations that evolve through repetition and perspective. The collection enhances the depth of relief, expressing a timeless architectural language.

Roberto Sironi, Italian designer based in Milan whose practice is distinguished by a rigorous, research-led approach that investigates the cultural and symbolic dimensions of design. Through the interplay of material, function, and narrative, his work transforms historical, geographical, and anthropological research into objects that transcend conventional typologies, inhabiting the space between functional design and sculptural artifact.
